Types of Honors Courses

- 1. Honors sections of existing courses: Regular courses with additional or appropriately substituted learning activities to make them honors level. (Each department decides the offering of honors sections of existing courses.)
- 2. Linked Honors Courses: Two or more courses linked, forming a learning community. Linked courses have the same students and the instructors coordinate the course syllabus and learning activities. (The offering of linked courses needs to be coordinated through Project Success. Contact Sue Jensen at 619-644-7493.)
- 3. Honors Seminar: A course devoted to intensive investigation of a single topic or problem. To a greater degree than in regular courses, students are responsible for contributing to seminar dialogues, completing a reading list, and producing written work and/or special projects of superior quality. Topics and instructors change every
- Honors contract in regular courses: Any section of an existing course can be converted into an honors section for a particular student, if an honors student and the instructor develop an honors contract for the class. The student, the instructor, the Department Chair, the appropriate Dean and the Honors Coordinator must approve and sign the honors contract.

- 1. Scheduling of honors courses must go through the regular department scheduling procedures in addition to informing and coordinating with the Honors Coordinator.
- 2. Faculty interested in teaching honors must inform both the Department Chair and the Honors Coordinator about her/his interest. The faculty member must identify course number, section and time of interest. Faculty interested in teaching honors courses are encouraged to take the initiative and promote a dialogue within their departments about honors education. Ideally, each department will:
  - have a faculty dialogue about their interest, feasibility and commitment to teach honors courses.
  - decide the number of honors sections to offer and the courses appropriate for honors offerings.
  - decide the process of choosing which faculty member can teach honors courses.
  - determine what constitutes honors within their discipline: types of assignments, readings, projects, requirements, levels of analysis, etc.

- 3. To teach an honors section of an existing course, the faculty member needs department approval.
- 4. Honors sections of existing courses must follow the official course description, course objectives and prerequisites on file in addition to the requirements for participation in the Honors Program. Faculty cannot change official course description, objectives and prerequisites. Faculty is encouraged to be creative in terms of the learning experiences and strategies to meet course objectives: readings, class format, special projects, exams, written assignments, research projects, etc.
- 5. Each honors section will be identified in the class schedule and will have an annotation describing recommended preparation. The following are examples of schedule annotation:

This is an honors section. Students must be eligible for ENG 120 and Math 103. College students are invited to enroll if they have completed 12 units and have a 3.2 G.P.A. or higher. Entering freshman are invited to enroll if their high school G.P.A. is at least 3.2. For more information, contact the Honors Coordinator at 619-644-####.

- 6. Department Chairs/coordinators are responsible for:
  - Informing the Honors Coordinator about final scheduling of honors sections in their departments.
  - Submitting an annotation regarding student recommended preparation for each honors section to both the Honors Coordinator and their division Dean.
  - Approve honors contracts.
- 7. The Honors Coordinator is responsible for:
  - Placing an ad including all honors offerings in the official class schedule.
  - Approve the annotation describing the recommended preparation for each honors section.
  - Prepare and implement a marketing/student recruitment plan for honors courses.
  - Encourage/solicit faculty to develop honors courses.
  - Approve honors contracts.
- 8. Honors sections must follow the minimum and maximum class size requirements for regular courses. Chairs and faculty are encouraged to be creative regarding room allocations and the maintenance of small class size (within the minimum requirements).

The Honors Course Learning Experience

- 1. The honors student must participate in the regular learning experiences of an existing course. However, there must be substitute or side-by-side assignments of a more challenging nature. When designing the honors section learning experience, the instructor should think in terms of greater depth and breadth. The emphasis of honors education is creative, scholarly work.
- 2. Examples of additions/substitutions for the learning strategies of an honors section include, but are not limited to, the following:
  - more challenging reading material
  - emphasis on current research reports instead of textbook summaries
  - intensive creative writing experience
  - reading logs
  - new writing assignments that emphasize analysis, synthesis, and evaluation
  - reaction papers to ethical dilemmas
  - internship in the field of study, performing an expanded leadership position
  - developing a research proposal
  - conducting original disciplinary research
  - developing an annotated bibliography
  - presenting original work/research to the class, a student-faculty group, or at a conference

Evaluation of Honors Courses

to

- 1. Faculty teaching honors courses are evaluated according the labor agreement between the Governing Board and United Faculty. Honors sections are considered part of the faculty regular load and/or extra-pay assignment.
- 2. The honors committee will request feedback from participating faculty and students regarding their honors experience, with the purpose of finding ways of improving the program. Information gathered through instruments designed by the honors committee will not be part of any contractual faculty evaluation.
- 3. Faculty teaching honors courses must submit a copy of their honors section syllabus to the Honors Coordinator, in addition to the regular filing of their syllabus with the appropriate dean.
