HAPPY HOLIDAYS!

We Have A Gift For You!! - A NEW JOB!

Given the holiday period, present state of the economy and the mood of the nation, all you may hear is that it's "not exactly a good time to look for a job".

Sorry! Wrong! The above statement is a myth! In fact, just the opposite and here is why.

Based on a number of experiences during the past decade and a half, the holiday months of November and December have been the best months for job hunting. Why? This is because the seeds were sown during the last two months of the year, the results of which were harvested in January of the following year.

From Thanksgiving week to New Year's Day, corporate America bathes in a special glow. A holiday and shopping mood prevails. Executives with power to hire you are generally traveling less during this period. People are taking vacations. A holiday spirit prevails and there is a greater mood of courtesy and charity.

Another factor is that managers may have more time to talk with you and are relaxed.

Note: Other job hunters have temporarily dropped out of the race for two months which gives you a statistical advantage of winning or bagging your trophy – a desirable job! Perseverance and patience are admirable qualities from a hiring manager's perspective and work well for the candidate.

Holiday parties are a wonderful opportunity for networking – so don't pass it up. There is really no harm in discreetly exchanging business cards at most parties.
